Wilson Security Acquires Western Advance East Coast Division, bolstering existing electronic security portfolio.

Wilson Security has announced the acquisition of Western Advance's East Coast Commercial Security Division, marking a significant milestone in its growth strategy and supporting a long-term outlook of evolving customer needs.

The acquisition comes a matter of months after Wilson Security's appointment of GM Electronic Security, Norman Grieve, to lead its electronic security portfolio. Team members of Western Advance's East Coast business will join Wilson Security to bolster the division. This will provide greater capability for the Eastern states, particularly in the key market of NSW.

Wilson Security's evidenced capability in providing customer solutions that combine human capital, technology and data, makes the acquisition highly complementary. With enhanced capability, advanced technologies and combined infrastructure, they are primed to support customers across a wide range of sectors. These include Justice, Commonwealth government and healthcare (where Western Advance supply advanced scanning and access technologies) critical infrastructure, corporate real estate and higher education.

Signaling a period of sustained growth as the catalyst for the acquisition, Nick Schijf, Chief Operating Officer for Wilson Security, shared "This acquisition is strategically important to delivering our long-term growth agenda and aligns with customer needs. The Western Advance East Coast team possess significant expertise, whilst benefiting from our national capabilities, infrastructure, and customer partnerships. We are delighted to welcome the team onboard whilst continuing our focus of delivering outcomes that add value to our customers, well beyond typical Security Operations."

Existing Wilson Security and Western Advance's East Coast Commercial Security Division customers can expect continuity of service whilst benefiting from the acquisition over the medium-long term.
